HERBERT INGELSE EXPIRES SUDDENLY

WELL KNOWN GROTON FARMER
SUCCUMBS TO AN ATTACK OF THE HEART

Herbert Ingelse, a well known farmer residing in Groton, died suddenly of heart failure Saturday night at his home on the outskirts of town. His death came as a great surprise to his host of friends in Groton, since he apparently had been enjoying the best of health until about ten days before his sudden death. He is survived by four sisters and one brother.

Mr. Ingelse left town Saturday night about 11:30, after a conversation with Oscar Anderson at the drug store, and his death must have occurred as he reached home or shortly thereafter. His body was found in the vestibule of the kitchen fully dressed in overcoat, overshoes and cap, and it is surmised that he had either reached home and had gone into the yard on some errand, or that the end overtook him as he was entering the kitchen after going home from town. His body was found at about 8:30 on Sunday morning by Jack Byrne, who has been making his home with Mr. Ingelse for the past several years.

Mr. Inglis was an unmarried man and came to this vicinity in 1900 and settled in East Riverside township. He was born at Sheboygan, Wis., November 24, 1870. He has been a resident of this vicinity for the past thirty years and held in the highest esteem by all of those who knew him. He had served as clerk of Groton township for many years and was a member of the town board at the time of his death.

He was a quiet, retiring type of man, but those who came to know him best found beneath his retirement a character of unquestioned honesty and a spirit of generosity that drew friends to him by the hundreds, all of whom were greatly shocked and sorrowed to hear of his sudden and untimely death.

The funeral was held from the Presbyterian church Tuesday afternoon, conducted by Rev. E. W. Spence and the remains were laid to rest in Groton cemetery.
